[0023] It should be noted that the preferred embodiment discloses a broad case wherein only two query categories are described: one for navigational queries and one for information queries. However, in addition to classifying a query to a query category, a different methodology can be used to calculate a rank configuration. For example, the calculation of these parameters could also be done using a function which interpolates a value in between the query categories, which results in a more gradual selection of ranking parameters. For instance, this function could decide that a query is 30 % navigational and 70 % informational. The parameters would be calculated accordingly. This leads to a more fuzzy generation of ranking parameters. In this case, a query would have a probability associated with each query class. As an example, for three query classes A, B, and C, a query 'q' can have A:0.8, B:0.15, and C:0.05, where the sum of probabilities is always 1.

As Berton et al is not prior art against the invention of claims 1-17, and new claims 18 and 19 are dependent from claims 1 and 12 respectively, claims 18 and 19 are also allowable, even though Lempel's contribution was conceived later than the relevant dates.
